‘Energies’ / Swiss Institute, New York, USA

In the 1970s, a New York co-op – located about a ten-minute walk from where the Swiss Institute building stands today – mounted a solar and wind array on its roof, redistributed energy to the community and won a lawsuit that not only secured a payout from a monopolistic utility provider but also changed national energy regulations. ‘Energies’ builds on this hyperlocal story of community organizing and resilience with energy-oriented work by an international cohort, including Joar Nango’s halibut-stomach insulation (Skievvar #2, 2024) and Haroon Mirza’s rooftop solar sculpture (Oscillations for Caduceus, 2024), which powers not only his own sound piece but also Ash Arder’s installation Consumables (11092024) (2024). It’s the rare kind of show that makes alternative futures feel possible.
